2. The content of Siollabas Bhonnleibhéal 1

The syllabus outlines the minimum language level required to enable a learner to function within a defined subject range. It is important to remember, however, that the needs of the learners must always be taken into account in the designing of teaching materials.

This is a communicative syllabus. This means that it focuses on various functions pertaining to particular topics and subject-matter. Examples are given of expressions which could be used to introduce the learners to those functions. As well as that, lists of useful vocabulary and phrases are provided for teaching this subject-matter to the class. The lists of vocabulary and expressions in this syllabus are not exhaustive and teachers are advised to take the needs of the learners into account in preparing their own courses.

It is of vital importance that the learners' needs are to the forefront in the creation of a course of instruction or teaching programme. These needs must be fully ascertained through the use of questionnaires and interviews, prior to the preparation of class lessons. For example, what are the learners' pastimes, what type of work do they do, where do they live, what are their skills, what subject-matter would they like to cover in the class and so on. With such information to hand, class lessons can take into account the needs and interests of the learners.

Teachers can adapt the content of the syllabus as best suits the course of instruction they put together. That is to say, it is not necessary to stick to the order or layout of the units as given in the syllabus. However, it is important to cover the various functions and the examples of phrases/vocabulary.

Teachers are expected to use their own dialectal preference when teaching the subject matter of the syllabus. Occasionally, important phrases from the main dialects are given. For example, how to greet someone: Cad é mar atá tú?, Cén chaoi a bhfuil tú? and Conas tá tú? It is expected at this level that the learners would be able to use one of the above versions without difficulty, and that they would be capable of understanding the other two. Similarly, in matters of vocabulary (for example druid/dún) and of grammar (for example, ar an bhóthar/ar an mbóthar), it is enough for the learner at this level to be able to use one version correctly and to understand the rest.

3. Grammar

One of the most important features of the communicative syllabus is the way in which grammar is taught. In traditional syllabi the teaching of grammar was prioritised above all else, but in the communicative syllabus grammar is taught in the context of subject matter and topics. For example, in Topic 3 (The Family), the personal numbers from 1 to 10 are explained to the learners. It is not suggested that every rule concerning the personal numbers be taught at this level. It is sufficient at Bonnleibhéal 1 (A1) that the learner should understand the question Cá mhéad deartháir atá agat? and that he or she might be able to give a basic answer such as beirt. Certainly, essential grammar points should not be neglected and it is often useful to focus formally on a specific grammar point.

4. Learners and the language learning process

Teachers are well aware that not all language learners progress at the same rate. Many factors can influence the success of learning, for example, the learner's background, personality, age, motivation etc.

Much is now understood about the importance of how the learner engages in the learning process. As learners reflect on themselves as participants in a learning process, on their weaknesses and talents, and on the strategies they use, their success in language learning will increase.

It cannot be assumed that all learners have this awareness or that they understand the importance of such an approach. Therefore, the teacher is obliged to urge and direct the learners to get to know their own learning style and to understand the strategies that help them in language acquisition.

The following paragraphs describe some of the strategies that should be emphasised in the teaching and learning process to aid learners to benefit fully from their study.

4.1 Learning and communication strategies

Making mistakes is a natural part of language acquisition. It is obvious that learners will experience difficulty when they try to use the language. Communicative strategies help the learners to be more effective in speaking because they help learners plan what it is they want to say, monitor their effectiveness and take steps to correct problems as they arise. These compensatory strategies help the learners to communicate successfully despite gaps in their knowledge that may obstruct communication.

Throughout the learning process, learners will benefit from repeated opportunities to develop the use of these strategies and to adopt a more active approach to their own learning. Teachers should try constantly to inform learners of how to use the right strategy. A once-off reference to learning strategies is not enough. Effective teaching relies on the consistent use of these essential strategies and the entire teaching method must be grounded in the implementation of these strategies as a guiding principle. It is not necessary to instruct the learner in the use of specific strategies and techniques. However, it is important to help them to recognise the effective strategies they already employ and to develop new strategies.

Outlined below are some of the strategies learners should use.

When speaking

Compensating in the event of the learner experiencing information deficit. Seeking help with regard to a specific word/phrase/point:

Cén Ghaeilge atá air...? (What is the Irish for...?)
Conas a deirtear...? (How does one say...?)

Questioning others to establish if they have understood what has been said:

An dtuigeann tú sin? (Do you understand that?)

Monitoring progress. Questioning another/others to determine if what the learner has said is correct:

An bhfuil sin ceart? (Is that correct?)

When listening

Expressing the fact that the learner does not understand:

Tá brón orm. Ní thuigim sin. (I'm sorry. I don't understand that.)
Gabh mo leithscéal, ach ní thuigim sin. (Excuse me, but I don't understand that.)

Seeking clarification:

Cad é a chiallaíonn...? (What is the meaning of...?)
An bhféadfá é sin a mhíniú dom, le do thoil?
(Could you explain that to me, please?)

Requesting that the interlocutor repeats what he/she has said:

Arís, le do thoil. (Could you repeat, please?)

Seeking confirmation that the learner has understood what has been said:

An é 'an Fhraincis' a dúirt tú? (Did you say 'French')?

Asking the interlocutor to speak more slowly

An bhféadfá labhairt níos moille, le do thoil?
(Could you speak more slowly, please?)

Learning in general

The learner should:

Understand his/her own individual learning style. What helps and what obstructs learning? What strategies does the learner use to enhance his/her own learning?

Organise his/her study. Identify areas of weakness and strength and focus on these, thus making study more effective.

Plan before undertaking tasks.

Monitor progress during specific task work and learning generally.

While working on a text or undertaking a task

The learner should:

Repeat words or structures aloud or to him self/herself.

Make correct use of dictionaries, grammar books, lists of terms, and other resources both printed and electronic.

Categorise and order new information as it being learned. Note/summarise main points.

Seek help, for example, by asking the teacher or other people to repeat/ clarify/advise/give extra examples.

Work in tandem with other learners.

4.2 Language awareness

Language awareness refers to the learner's understanding of the language learning process and his/her analysis of the way the language works.

The learner certainly benefits from such an approach as he or she sets out on the process of acquiring the language.

The learner should be guided and motivated to investigate the following phenomena:

the way in which the language works

the different patterns that are to be found in the language

the similarities and differences between Irish and English

the similarities and differences between Irish and the learner's other languages.

There should be a continuous focus on various aspects of language awareness and sociolinguistic awareness during the teaching process. Suitable texts, including written, aural, and visual texts, can be used to motivate the learner to reflect on these matters. The purpose of this approach is to assist the language acquisition process by giving the learner opportunities to identify areas of weakness in his/her information base, particularly when speaking.

Outlined below are some examples of areas upon which the learner should focus.

Grammatical terminology

It is important that the learner should be aware of grammatical terminology in Irish so as to have the necessary skills to analyse the language grammatically and to use dictionaries and other reference materials correctly.

Syntax

The learner should be able to differentiate between Irish syntax and English. Observe the examples below:

I went to the shop.	Chuaigh mé go dtí an siopa.
The black book.	An leabhar dubh.
He has long black hair.	Tá gruaig fhada dhubh air.

Emphasis/stress

The learner should recognise how emphasis in a sentence is different in Irish compared to English. For example:

Bríd: Is maith liom ceol. An maith leatsa ceol?

It is a common mistake in Irish to vocally stress the word leat, as in the case in English where the word you (emphatic) is stressed. In Irish, however, the suffix -sa is added to the prepositional pronoun leat for the purpose of emphasis.

Awareness of pattern

The learner should seek to identify patterns in Irish grammar. By using suitable texts, the teacher can ask the learner to be attentive to the various grammar patterns that may be evident, for example the different endings for plural nouns and future tense verb endings.

Register

It is important that the learner be able to identify different contexts that require a specific register, for example, giving orders to children as opposed to giving orders to adults. (See Topic 13 Orders)

Dialects

The learner must be helped to understand the variations that exist between regional dialects. This can be achieved by highlighting the range of expression in various dialects and by pointing out the lexical variations between them, for example different greetings and individual lexical items such as bord/tábla (table) or buachaill/garsún (boy).

Phonetics

The teacher should seek to focus the learner's attention on the principal differences that exist between phonemes in Irish and in English. For example, the learner should be made aware that there are almost twice as many consonants in Irish than in English (dó/deo, gal/geal, paca/peaca).

5. Sociocultural knowledge

A number of those taking a course based on this syllabus may not be Irish, or may be studying Irish abroad. It is therefore important that these learners be given basic information about some principal aspects of Irish culture, particularly those aspects relating to Irish and the Gaeltacht (Irish-speaking areas).

It is recommended that aspects of Irish culture are explored during class activities rather than being the subject of a stand-alone teaching unit.

Below are some aspects of culture that should be explored in class:

- personal and family names commonly found in Ireland some of the most important Irish placenames
- major festivals
- basic information about Irish music, song and dance
- basic information about Gaeltacht areas.

6. Skills

Below is a brief description of what a learner who has completed a course of study at this level is expected to be able to do.

6.1 Speaking and listening

Learners will be able to use single words and simple sentences while taking part in a conversation based on topics and general information that relate to everyday life. For example, they will be able to give a very basic description of themselves, where they live, their work and their daily routine. They will rely heavily on memorised sentences but will be able to use some communication strategies to help them maintain interaction.

Learners will be able to understand simple speech delivered in a slow, carefully articulated but natural manner. They will rely heavily on others for assistance in their efforts to carry on communication.

6.2 Reading

Learners will understand texts that are short and simple insofar as they relate specifically to everyday life. They will understand the text on a phrase-by-phrase basis, finding words and recognisable phrases. They will reread the text as often as necessary.

6.3 Writing

Learners will be able to write simple words and very simple basic phrases. In Scrúdú Bhonnleibhéal 1 (A1) candidates are asked to write single words only.
